Papers are invited from researchers in law, media studies and related fields. Work is particularly welcome that focuses on interactions of media and communications law or policy and public speech. Such research might engage with:

Content creation, use and re-use	Copyright law, technology and control
Defamation and public debate	Digital worlds and publics
Free speech and media access	Futures of television
Journalism and popular media	Media representations of law
Privacy and publicity	Public interest in law and practice
Public media and public knowledge	Reporting courts
Trademarks and speech	User-generated content

Please submit an abstract of up to 300 words including keywords and a biography of 100 words to law-cmcl@unmelb.edu.au. Selected papers will be considered for publication in the Media & Arts Law Review. Please indicate if you would like your paper considered for publication.
