

Table of Contents

Preface
Professor Sally Walker	3
Part 1 Introduction	4
Part 2 The Internet	9
2.1 Introduction	9
2.2 What is the Internet?	9
2.3 Autonomy of Internet Applications	10
2.4 Internet applications	11
2.5 Participants in the publication via the Internet	13
2.6 The Internet and defamation law	16
Part 3 Liability for defamation: publication	19
3.1 Introduction	19
3.2 Who is a publisher?	21
3.3 Legal principles applying to the publication of defamatory material	23
3.4 Legal bases of liability for defamation	26
3.5 “Taking part” in publication	27
3.6 Authorisation	31
3.7 Liability as an “accessory”	35
3.8 Vicarious liability	40
3.9 Joint liability	46
3.10 Liability for republication	48
3.11 Conclusion	49
Part 4 Innocent dissemination	52
4.1 Introduction	52
4.2 The development of innocent dissemination	53
4.3 Thompson v Australian Capital Television	58
4.4 Auvill v CBS 60 Minutes	66
4.5 Statutory defence in Queensland and Tasmania	68
4.6 Conclusion	70

Part 5 Defamation via the Internet: content providers, message originators and carriers	74
5.1 Introduction	74
5.2 Content providers and message originators	75
5.3 Telecommunications carriers	80
5.4 Conclusion	88
Part 6 Defamation via the Internet: liability of Internet intermediaries	91
6.1 Introduction	91
6.2 Common law liability of Internet intermediaries	92
6.2.1 United States decisions	92
6.2.2 Godfrey v Demon Internet Ltd	100
6.3 Statutory Defences	103
6.3.1 The United States statutory immunity	103
6.3.2 The United Kingdom statutory defence	109
6.3.3 The Australian statutory defence	112
6.4 Liability of Internet intermediaries under Australian common law	114
6.5 Conclusion	120
Part 7 Conclusion	125
7.1 Who should be a publisher?	126
7.2 To what extent should Internet intermediaries be liable for publishing defamatory material by means of the Internet?	134
7.3 Recommendations for altering liability rules for defamatory material published by means of the Internet	139
Selected Bibliography	144